

Are you worried about your baby's care?

Information for parents and carers of babies who are staying in hospital.

What is Martha's Rule?

Martha's Rule is a patient safety service for babies and their families or carers. Parents or carers can call for advice and help if there is a concern about the condition of their baby who is in hospital. This service was previously known as "Call for Concern".

If a baby suddenly appears unwell, call for help immediately from your ward team.

Who runs the Martha's Rule service?

Martha's Rule is run by a team of specialist adult critical care nurses who will work alongside the neonatal and paediatric medical and nursing teams to address your concerns.

The team are available 24 hours a day to help support ward staff in the care of very unwell babies and children. The team can offer help over the telephone and or discuss with the relevant consultant or team regarding your concerns if there is a noticeable change in the baby's condition.

When to contact the Martha's Rule service

- There is a significant change in a baby's condition and, after discussion with the ward team your concerns have not been addressed.
- You have ongoing medical concerns even after discussing them with the ward nurses or doctors.

When not to contact the Martha's Rule service

Martha's Rule is a patient safety service. It should therefore not be used to report general problems such as issues with bed, room, food or parking.

If you need to discuss such issues, please ask for the ward manager or matron.
